The inscription on brass, in a neat oak frame, of course proves nothing, though it may well date from the middle of the seventeenth century. Its most attractive feature is the neatly engraved head of Parr, which is little at variance with that given in Taylor's pamphlet. It is hard to think this screne faced person, in the conical skullcap, the trim white collar and many buttoned coat, was a farm laborer all his life. His peaked beard is of the kind Vandyke loved to paint, and his mustache runs down into it. The nose is long and straight, and his evebrows are handsomely arched.

Whether this portrait be a true or an ideal one, it is famously suggestive of a man who "hath not been troubled in mind for either the building or throwing down of abbeys and religious houses,' who did never "murmur at the manner of prayers, let them be Latin or Engthe religion of the king and queen that were (sic) in being." It is to be hoped indeed he was such a man. else he Record. and who "held it safest to be of Napoleon, O., June 7, 1894.—Hand Medicine Co.—My baby at three mouths old had colic so badly we feared spasms. My hoshand ran to the drugg st for "soothing syrup." Our physician was present when he called for it and advised him to try Dr. Hand's Colic Cure. We did so.
